INTRODUCTION

The John Haywood Papers are the notes collected by John Haywood (1762-1826) that he used to write The Civil and Political History of the State of Tennessee, published in 1823. John Haywood was a founder and first president of the Tennessee Antiquarian Society, the forerunner of the Tennessee Historical Society. The collection was donated by Dr. and Mrs. Oscar Noel, Jr., of Nashville, Tennessee. The papers occupy .42 linear feet of shelf space and number 16 items.

Photocopies of the papers have been produced and the papers have been microfilmed. These should be used whenever possible, with the encapsulated originals used only when absolutely necessary. There are no restrictions on the use of the collection.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The papers of John Haywood were presented to the Tennessee Historical Society by Dr. and Mrs. Oscar Noel, Jr., on June 7, 1983. The collection is composed of the notes written by persons from whom Judge Haywood solicited information before he wrote the first history of Tennessee, The Civil and Political History of the State of Tennessee, published in 1823.

Not all of the testimony and narrative in these notes was used in Haywood's published history; some of it was used in modified form. All of it, however, represents one of the earliest written compilations and eyewitness accounts of early Tennessee history, particularly of the settlement of Middle Tennessee. The accounts of key explorers and leaders such as Kaspar Mansker and Edward Swanson are invaluable in this regard. The John Haywood Papers, therefore, constitute an important manuscript cache of highly significant testimony regarding the exploration, Indian warfare, and settlement of early Tennessee. Nearly all of this material concerns events that occurred prior to Tennessee becoming a state in 1796.

John Haywood was born on March 16, 1762, in Halifax County, North Carolina, the son of Egbert Haywood who had served as an officer in the Revolutionary War. John Haywood served as Solicitor General of North Carolina from 1790 to 1791, Attorney General of that state from 1791-1793, and a judge of the Superior Court from 1793 until 1800. He moved to Tennessee in 1807 and settled on Nolensville Road, seven miles southeast of Nashville, where he lived on a farm that he called Tusculum. He was a founder and first president of the Tennessee Antiquarian Society, the forerunner of today's Tennessee Historical Society. Haywood died on December 22, 1826.

To facilitate the use of this collection, the papers have been separated into six folders and a calendar prepared for each group. When it appears that these notes were the source for the information contained in Haywood's book, text page numbers have been provided. Notations in parentheses have been made when the notes appear to contain "new" contradictory, or additional information. A name index has also been provided. In 2003, the Haywood Papers were transcribed and these transcriptions are found with the originals. Shortly afterwards, the papers were microfilmed.

Folder 1. The identity of the writer of the notes in this folder is not known. The material contained therein describes some events that took place in East Tennessee during the 1770s; however, most of the information relates to the settlement of Middle Tennessee and the depredations suffered by the settlers in this area at the hands of the Indians.

Folder 2. This folder contains information entitled "Donelson's Journal" and appears to have followed very closely the events described in the journal kept by John Donelson on his journey from East Tennessee in 1779 to what was to become the Nashville area. The identity of the writer of these notes is also unknown.

Folder 3. The material in this folder is identified as “Mansker’s Narrative,” written by Kaspar Mansker, an early explorer of the Cumberland Valley of Tennessee, who was born about 1750. He first navigated the Cumberland river in 1769 and returned with another party in 1771, making his headquarters at Station Camp, ten miles west of Gallatin. Mansker again came to the area in 1779 and built a fort near Mansker’s Lick. Three years later he built a fort about one mile east of the first where he made his home until he died about 1824. The material contained in this folder describes Mansker’s pre-settlement explorations of Middle Tennessee.

Folder 4. The notes in folder 4, author unknown, pertain primarily to the Indian attacks on the settlements and also the retaliatory expeditions against the Indians launched by the settlers. A most interesting segment in these notes is an account giving date and location, of the encampments of the settlers who came to Nashville in 1788 under the protection of the first guard sent out from Knoxville.

Folder 5. The notes in folder 5 are called “Appendix 1,” “Appendix 2,” and “Appendix 3,” and are attributed to Edward Swanson. Swanson was born on December 28, 1759, and came to the present site of Nashville with James Robertson and six others in 1779. He was wounded during the Battle of the Bluffs, served as a constable at Freeland’s Station, and settled later in Williamson County where he died in 1840. These notes are particularly significant because they contain a daily account of Robertson’s first exploratory expedition to the Nashville area in the spring of 1779, an account of the Battle of the Bluffs, and a description of the French Lick Fort.

Folder 6. This folder contains information entitled “Errors in Haywood” and has both contradictions and additions to the text. Although the name of the contributor is not given, the handwriting appears to be that of Swanson who wrote the appendices. Since these notes refer to page numbers contained in the first edition of Haywood’s history, the page numbers which appear in all later editions are also included.
