Luke Lea Papers, 1826-1993 (bulk 1876-1945)

COLLECTION SUMMARY

Creator:

Lea, Luke, 1879-1945

Inclusive Dates:

1826-1993, bulk 1876-1945

Scope & Content:

The Luke Lea Papers, containing approximately 32 cubic feet and nine oversize boxes, span the period 1826 through 1993, although the bulk is largely concentrated in the years 1876 through 1945. The collection is composed of applications, clippings, correspondence, diaries, financial records, interviews, legal records, photographs, subject files and several miscellaneous items.

The majority of the collection is composed of correspondence. Luke Lea was an important political leader and this correspondence reflects his involvement in state and national affairs. From 1908, Lea had a close working relationship with key leaders of the Democratic party, and within the collection are representative letters from such prominent persons as William Jennings Bryan and Woodrow Wilson. Included are many routine business letters involving the operation of the Tennessean newspaper and other business concerns. Although he tended to handle business affairs face-to-face, his letters record with whom he was in contact at a given period.

A second large part of the correspondence is from his son, Luke Lea Jr. A portion of their correspondence was written while Lea Sr. was in prison, but the majority falls after his release. This correspondence primarily details father and son's business ventures in the late 1930s. There is a small amount of correspondence from family members including his first wife, Mary Louise (Warner) Lea and his parents, Overton and Ella Lea. Correspondence in the collection is arranged in alphabetical order. The correspondence from Luke Lea is arranged in chronological order.

There are a large number of newspaper clippings in the collection. The clippings are centered primarily around Lea's career in the United States Senate. There are some prison clippings and clippings related to family matters as well. Loose clippings were removed from the collection, photocopied, and the originals destroyed. Scrapbooks containing clippings are located in the oversized boxes.

An important part of the collection are Lea's diaries. The diaries fall into two categories, those kept while he was serving in World War I and those kept during his imprisonment in North Carolina. Lea's handwriting is extremely difficult to read, and a word or phrase is frequently impossible to decipher. Fortunately for the researcher, Dr. Cromwell Tidwell hired two stenographers to transcribe the diaries. Both the original diaries and the transcriptions are included in the collection.

The legal records detail Lea's court battles during the 1930s. Included in this category are affidavits, briefs, extradition papers, and testimonies from court trials. The testimony from the Lea trials are almost complete, with only one volume missing. There is also a complete set of testimony from the Wallace B. Davis trial. A thesis written in the late 1930s, gives a history and analysis of the Luke Lea trials.

Another important part of the collection is subject files. The subject files were taken from Lea's office after his death and may contain correspondence and other materials relating to a particular subject. There are financial records in the collection including a few receipts and Lea's income tax records. Lea's military records with maps showing his regiment's activities in France during World War I are also included in the collection. Researchers interested in World War I should consult the many photographs located in Boxes 66 and 67. Finally, the collection also contains interviews used in preparation for Mary Louise Tidwell's biography of Luke Lea, as well as articles Lea wrote for various newspapers and journals.

The Luke Lea Papers record the life of one of Tennessee's most colorful leaders. As a politician and molder of public opinion, Lea helped shape, for good or bad, the direction of Tennessee politics for the first three decades of the twentieth century. His rapid rise to power and influence is made even more poignant by his downfall in the 1930s. The Luke Lea Papers represent an important, but little known period of Tennessee history.

The collection was updated in 2011 with the addition of Lea's World War I diary to Box 68. A typewritten transcription of the diary had been in Box 26, Folders 1-5, and was subsequently moved to Box 68; it is now Box 68, Folders 2-6. Further updating was done to photographs in Boxes 66 and 67. Seven photographs from Box 48 were moved to Box 66 to be housed with the rest of the photographs, and all of the photographs in both Box 66 and Box 67 were then reorganized and renumbered.

Lea's own typewritten account of his attempt to kidnap the Kaiser in 1919 had been housed in Box 57, Folder 5, and Box 45, Folder 1. Since the latter was the second half of Lea's account, it was moved to Box 57, Folder 5, in order to include it with the first half of the account. Researchers interested in the attempt to kidnap the Kaiser should also examine the materials in Box 45, Folder 2A, which contains correspondence related to Lea's attempts to get his account published. Box 40, Folder 9, also contains correspondence related to the plot. Thomas P. Henderson, a member of the group that attempted to kidnap the Kaiser, wrote to the Saturday Evening Post in 1949 and offered additional information about the endeavor, including a transcript of Lea's testimony during the official Army inquiry into the incident.

In December 2019, an unprocessed box of 76 cellulose nitrate negatives belonging to the collection were discovered in the conservation lab. The negatives are from photographs taken of various financial records. They were most likely used as evidence in his bank fraud trial following the collapse of the Central Bank and Trust Company of Asheville, North Carolina. The box of negatives is now Box 69 in the collection.

Administrative/Biographical History

The Luke Lea Papers, containing approximately 32 cubic feet of archival materials, are centered around the career of Luke Lea Sr., prominent Tennessee political leader and founder and publisher of the Nashville Tennessean. Luke Lea was born in 1878, in Nashville, Tennessee, the son of Overton and Ella (Cocke) Lea. After his graduation from the University of the South and Columbia University, Lea began to practice law in Nashville, Tennessee, in 1903. He was a successful lawyer, but soon turned his attention to other enterprises. On May 10, 1907, Lea organized the Nashville Tennessean, which was to become one of the most influential newspapers in the state.

Politically, Lea became prominent in 1908 over a split in the state Democratic Party. At the 1908 state Democratic convention, the Lea faction was able to gain control and secure the gubernatorial nomination for Lea's ally Malcolm R. Patterson. From 1908 until the election of Henry H. Horton in 1931, only one governor was elected without the support of the very powerful Luke Lea. Because of his great influence, Lea became known as the "maker of governors."

Lea reached the peak of his career in 1911, when the Tennessee General Assembly became deadlocked in the selection of a United States Senator. Lea differed with Governor Patterson over the issue of prohibition, Patterson championing the "wets" and Lea the prohibition cause. In this fight, he played a major role in the split of the Democratic party and the election of Ben W. Hooper, a fusion-dry candidate, to the governorship. Eventually, Lea was overwhelmingly elected to the United States Senate, entering that body as the youngest man ever to hold a seat. Two years later, however, the Seventeenth Amendment was adopted, which established direct election of United States Senators by popular vote. Lea's former ally, Malcolm Patterson, entered the Senate race in 1916. Congressman Kenneth D. McKellar then announced that he would be the third candidate for the seat. All attention centered on the bitter fight between the two main candidates, Lea and Patterson, while McKellar held the middle course. McKellar won the election and held the senatorship for many decades afterwards. The "Boss" Crump machine was just beginning to feel its power, and it played a role in the first McKellar nomination. Thereafter, Lea was to wage almost continual warfare with the Memphis-based Crump machine.

Shortly after his defeat for the Senate, the United States entered World War I. Lea organized a volunteer regiment, later to become the 114th Field Artillery and was commissioned a lieutenant colonel and later a colonel in command of the regiment. The Tennessee volunteer outfit served ten months in France and fought in the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne offensives that helped break the Hindenburg line. For his role in the war, Lea was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal. At the close of the war, Lea gathered a special party from the 114th and set out to capture Kaiser Wilhelm, who had fled to neutral Holland. The attempt to "kidnap" the Kaiser failed. While the U. S. Army conducted an official inquiry into the matter, Lea and his men were reprimanded but not court-martialed for their escapade. Lea was also one of the founders of the American Legion in 1919.

Lea plunged into the publishing and political fields after the war, bringing to both a number of men who had served with him in France. He championed the cause of Austin Peay and helped him win three terms as governor against the opposition of the Crump machine. In the 1920s, he became allied with Rogers Caldwell in the investment banking business of Caldwell and Company, purchased newspapers in Memphis and Knoxville newspapers, and engaged in other large financial operations.

With the financial crash of 1929, Lea lost the political power and business empire he had built. Within two years, he and his son, Luke Lea Jr. were indicted along with several others in North Carolina in the resulting failure of the Central Bank and Trust Company of Asheville, North Carolina. They immediately waived extradition and went to North Carolina to arrange for trial. When the trial was ready to start, the indictments were dismissed and a new indictment returned on different grounds. After a prolonged fight over the validity of the new indictment, a trial ensued with the jury holding that the Leas were guilty of violating the banking laws of North Carolina.

The two Leas disappeared pending the hearing for extradition, but later turned themselves into the sheriff of Fentress County where they had been staying. After another move to Clarksville, Tennessee, the Leas entered the North Carolina State Prison on May 10, 1934, to serve their terms. Lea was to serve six to ten years and his son two to six years or pay a $25,000 fine.

Luke Lea Jr. was freed after several months' imprisonment because of a serious condition requiring surgery. His father sought a pardon in 1935, but it was denied by North Carolina Governor J. C. B. Ehrichaus. However, he was paroled April 1, 1936, after serving less than two years, and later he was given a full pardon. Returning home, he was met at Lebanon, Tennessee, by a large motorcade of friends and his former soldiers. Nashville Mayor Hilary Howse, whom he had opposed politically, led the cavalcade, and Lea returned to Nashville escorted by the mayor and a squad of motorcycle officers.

After his return, Lea lived in semi-retirement. He never again achieved the success that he had known before the 1930s. Several attempts to repurchase the Tennessean failed, and other publishing ventures never realized their potential. Suffering from poor health in his later years, Lea died in a Nashville hospital on November 17, 1945. The only full-scale biography of Luke Lea was written by his daughter, Mary Louise Tidwell, in 1993. After the completion of her research, Mrs. Tidwell donated the Lea Papers to the Tennessee Historical Society.
