INTRODUCTION

This finding aid focuses on the papers of Rubye May Johnson, a teacher and genealogist. Spanning the years ca. 1700-1974, the papers hold a large amount of genealogical study on a variety of families. In addition to the genealogical research, the papers also include newspaper clippings, photographs, information about the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and the personal correspondence of Rubye Johnson May.

The Tennessee State Library & Archives received the Rubye May Johnson Papers through the agency of Mrs. Mary Ann Mitchell in 1974. The papers, a gift to Mrs. Mitchell from Mrs. May, arrived in Paige boxes and were arranged in no particular order. Personal papers were intermixed with genealogical research. Before this processing, someone had arranged much of the genealogical data alphabetically. The papers were in good condition when processed.

The materials in the collection measure approximately 14.5 cubic feet. Removal of some of the materials within the collection, such as duplicate church bulletins and lists of books to be checked out from the library, did occur. Also removed were lists of page numbers to genealogical books.

There are no restrictions on the materials. Single photocopies of the unpublished materials may be made for scholarly research.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The Rubye Johnson May Papers is comprised of family-specific genealogical research, general genealogical information, notebooks, and the personal papers of Rubye Johnson May. The bulk of the material falls within the period 1950-1974, but the inclusive dates of the collection are ca. 1700-1974. The materials are arranged by series, with series one being the family-specific genealogical data, series two being the general genealogical information, series three the notebooks, and series four the personal papers. The collection is arranged alphabetically within each of the four above-mentioned series.

Mrs. May devoted much time to genealogical research and consequently, the Rubye Johnson May papers contain a large number of files relating to genealogy. Mrs. May researched her own family genealogy, which included the Johnson, Flippin, McAdoo, May, and Groom families. A list of families found within the collection may be found later in the finding aid. A few of the other families researched by Mrs. May include the Anderson, Blount, Dobbins, Frazier, Hastings, Richards, Thompson, and Young families.

The collection also includes a large number of general genealogical aids collected by Mrs. May. These include notes made by Mrs. May on genealogical resources available within various states such as Tennessee, Kentucky, Indiana, North Carolina, and Virginia. Mrs. May also made notes concerning the census and land records of Tennessee counties such as Weakley, Madison, Carroll, Hardeman, and Washington counties. Information regarding a number of genealogical societies to which Mrs. May either belonged or corresponded include the Ft. Worth Genealogical Society, the Memphis Genealogical Society, the Mid-West Tennessee Genealogical Society, the National Genealogical Society, and the Tennessee Genealogical Society may be found within the papers. These papers contain much general genealogical information, such as genealogical definitions and sources.

A sizable portion of the collection consists of notebooks. The majority of the notebooks contain the results of genealogical examination and information. Some of the notebooks contain notes on religious topics as well. Also included in the notebook section are several grade books from Mrs. May's teaching career. Of particular interest is one such book that contains Mrs. May's estimation of her student's talents and probable outcome.

The final series of the collection contains the personal papers of Mrs. May. Included within this series are cards and invitations as well as her voluminous correspondence. There is also a large body of information relating to the Cumberland Presbyterian Church within the collection. The information includes church bulletins, church newsletters, and other church related items. Also found within the collection is an assortment of papers relating to the estate of Vera (Johnson) Barry, sister of Rubye Johnson May. A large collection of newspaper clippings on topics such as weddings, obituaries, the National Bank of Eastern Arkansas, and clippings on Mrs. May are also within the collection. The newspaper clippings were photocopied and then discarded. The photocopying was done in compliance with standard archival procedure. A collection of thirty-nine photographs exists within the collection. Many of the photographs were quite old, and were of deceased members of Mrs. May's family. The photographs were photocopied onto acid free paper and stored separately from the collection in compliance with standard archival procedure. Photocopies of the photographs are located within the collection.

The Rubye Johnson May Papers are extremely valuable to anyone attempting genealogical research. The papers include a varied body of specific genealogical research as well as general genealogical research tips. Mrs. May's personal papers are also of interest as they include much information regarding the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. In conclusion, the Rubye Johnson May Papers are a valuable addition to the collection of the Tennessee State Library & Archives.
