INTRODUCTION

The John Trotwood Moore Papers (1849–1957) were given to the Manuscript Section of the Tennessee State Archives by Mrs. John Trotwood Moore at the time of her retirement from the State Library in 1955. Additions were made to the collection by her grandson, Adam G. N. Moore, and her daughter, Helen Moore Cole (Mrs. Whitefoord R. Cole, Jr.).

The materials in this finding aid measure 39.48 cubic feet. There are no restrictions on the materials.

Literary rights to the unpublished writings found in this collection are reserved to the descendants of the Moores. Single photocopies of unpublished writings in the John Trotwood Moore Papers may be made for purposes of scholarly research.

SCOPE AND CONTENT

The John Trotwood Moore Papers, spanning the period 1849-1957, and numbering approximately twenty thousand items, contain correspondence, speeches, original literary manuscripts, legal documents, accounts, newspaper clippings, photographs, scrapbooks, memorabilia, and genealogical data. Although the collection centers upon the Moore family, it includes valuable material in other areas as well, depending upon the particular interest or period with which the researcher is concerned. Moore touched upon a diversity of subjects in his correspondence, writings, and public addresses.

A native of Marion, Alabama, in the Black Belt section of that state, John Trotwood Moore grew up in the tradition of the Old South to become one of its most articulate writers and poets. His father, Judge John Moore, was a veteran of the Confederate Army. He became one of South Alabama's most prominent jurists after the War. In 1878, John Trotwood Moore graduated from Howard College, a Baptist institution, located at that time in Marion, and embarked upon a journalistic career as the associate editor of the town's newspaper, the Marion Commonwealth. For a brief period, June 10-27, 1879, he published The Commencement Daily, a four-page sheet dedicated to advertising the local schools and promoting Marion as the "Athens of the South". Following his journalistic career, Moore taught school in Monterey and Pine Apple, Alabama, from 1879-1885, after which time he moved to Columbia, Maury County, Tennessee, to farm and raise horses with his bride, Florence Allen.

The move to Tennessee marked a significant turning point in Moore's life. His flair for writing brought employment in 1893 as columnist for Clark's Horse Review. In 1905, he began publishing his own magazine, Trotwood's Monthly, which, in 1907, merged with Bob Taylor's Magazine, to form the Taylor – Trotwood Magazine. It was also during this period that he produced several popular books such as Songs and Stories of Tennessee; A Summer Hymnal; A Romance of Tennessee; and The Bishop of Cottontown, all of which served to enhance his literary reputation throughout the state. Moore's appointment in 1919 as State Librarian was acclaimed across Tennessee as an excellent choice. When he died in 1929, his position was assumed by his wife, the former Mary Brown Daniel, whom he married four years after the death of his first wife. Mrs. Moore continued in the capacity until 1949.

The researcher into the period of the 1920s will find ample material in the Moore Papers dealing with local, state, and national issues and personalities. Mr. Moore's diary is particularly note-worthy in this regard. On July 3, 1924, for example, he described the Democratic National Convention meeting in New York City in the following manner: "The first ballot for Presidential nomination brought on a crisis not unlike that of 1860. McAdoo, clearly the only candidate with a progressive Democratic platform, and the only candidate except Smith with a fighting virile following, had been combined against by all the sinister influences ... within his party". His entry for July 8 sadly recorded that "they

[the Convention delegates] battered McAdoo out last night and nominated a very splendidly equipped Wall Street lawyer – This means the Democratic party has deserted Wilson and his progressive principles. It means farmer and laborer will organize and everlastingly beat them both for revolutions do not go backward”.

After the inauguration of Governor Austin Peay on January 19, 1925, Moore wrote that “Peay read as bold and courageous a message as ever came from any Governor of Tennessee – He is making the fight of his life to put the tax on the frivolities of life, the silk stockings of life and take it off the farmer and the necessities. He’ll win! No man ever lost that had the courage to do it.” Other subjects about which Moore wrote in considerable detail include the anti-evolution movement in Tennessee; prominent historical characters; local events; the State Library and Archives; historical markers and monuments; and his personal philosophy of life. Many of these topics, as well as others, are dealt with throughout the correspondence.

The largest portion of genealogical data in the collection is for the families of Brown, Daniel, and Moore. Genealogical notes dealing with numerous other families have been listed, including the families of Robert L. Caruthers, Sallie Childress (wife of James Polk), Colonel Gilbert Christian, David Crockett, Henry Melville Doak, Nathan Bedford Forrest, and Thomas Overton.

Three scrapbooks dealing with the life of Elizabeth II (Queen of England, 1952-) and her family, including her sister, Margaret, compiled by Helen Moore Cole (Mrs. Whitefoord R. Cole, Jr.) and twelve letters of Judge John Moore written while a prisoner at Johnson’s Island for the dates July 6 to November 16, 1864, have been added to the collection. These letters were edited by W. Stanley Hoole and published in the Alabama Review for July 1959.

Several photographs of John Trotwood and Mary Daniel Moore’s son, Merrill, are housed within Box 75. Many of these photos show Moore during his military service in World War II. Moore served as a psychiatrist in the United States Army’s Bougainville Campaign as well as New Zealand. Also included are two photos from a series titled “Special Southern Views” by the Russell Brothers from Anniston, Alabama. In some of these images, the Russell brothers depicted African Americans in stereotypical roles such as cotton laborers. These types of images often served as propaganda for the cotton industry. The two images in the collection bear the following captions: “T’s Gwine, A fine specimen the old time negro with jug, on his way to blind tiger for moonshine whiskey” and “T’s Been Dar. A Companion to No. 184-on the return. Fine contrast in expression. Both these views are highly suggestive.” There are 10 photographs of mostly unidentified African Americans laboring on a cotton farm in Box 75, folder 8. Six of these photographs are portraits of a child identified as “Sugar Pie Jones.” One of the portrait photographs notes that the photographs were taken by Julie Royster. Several of the photographs have comments written on the back. For example, “I hopes you’ll never have de misery in de head” was written on the back of a portrait of an older unidentified African American woman. The writer remains unidentified.

Oversize folder 1 contains photographs of Merrill Moore during his service in the Army during World War II, dated 1943, a photograph of an unidentified man, and a photograph of the inside of the Tennessee State Library in the Capitol building, dated March 6, 1940.

INDEX

This is a partial subject and name index. It contains the names of those persons with three or more letters and some others with a smaller number considered of such importance, either because of the person or the subject matter, as to warrant attention. The figures in parentheses immediately following each name denote the total number of letters from that person in the collection; the dates are for the period covered by the letters; identification of the writer is included whenever possible; and the last numbers given refer to the box or boxes in which the correspondence may be found. The state is Tennessee if not given.
