SCOPE AND CONTENT

The papers of the Tennessee American Revolution Bicentennial Commission document the procedure and activities Tennesseans observed to celebrate the two hundredth anniversary of the American Revolution. Tennessee, then a part of North Carolina, was not the scene of a single battle or skirmish because its geographical location placed it outside the main theaters of the war. Tennesseans, however, did participate in the Battle of Kings Mountain, South Carolina where a force of troops loyal to the Crown was decisively defeated.

Created by an act of the General Assembly in 1971 (Chapter 212, Senate Bill 606) the Commission consisted by twenty one citizens. Five (5) persons served as ex-officio members representing five (5) historical societies of the state while the other sixteen (16) members were appointed, eight (8) by the Governor and four (4) each by the Speaker of the House of the General Assembly.

Activities of the Commission were concentrated in three main areas; Heritage, a program whereby all ethnic groups of Tennesseans were urged to re-examine their origins, values, and the meaning of America; Festival, a call to all Tennessee's citizens to celebrate the two hundred years of American Freedom; Horizons, a summons to communities to undertake at least one principal project to improve the quality of community life. Other functions of the Commission were to serve as an advisory group and a clearinghouse to local Commissions in the solicitation of grants, Federal and State funds, for community projects.

The bulk of the records is correspondence dated mainly from 1971 to 1976. The correspondence is arranged by subject in chronological order. Of particular interest is the number and scope of local projects funded and completed during the Commission's lifetime. Other types of records include bulletins, minutes, news releases, and published material relating to the Revolutionary War.

A subject index has been completed for the research.
