SCOPE AND CONTENT

Original records of Tennessee's constitutional conventions are available for 1834, 1870, 1953, 1959, 1965, 1971 and 1977 and consist of minutes, journals, transcripts of proceedings, resolutions, petitions, committee reports, speeches, amendments, rules, biographical data, correspondence and oaths of office.

An indexed audio recording produced by the Archives staff is available for 1959, 1965, 1971 and 1977 Limited Convention. Floor sessions and select committee meetings are available through this medium.

The constitutional history of Tennessee is rather amply documented through printed materials, including the printed Journal and Proceedings of the various constitutional conventions. Liberal principles, such as those adopted in the articles of the Cumberland Compact, were incorporated into Tennessee's first constitution in 1796 and were characterized by Thomas Jefferson as "The least imperfect and the most republican in form of any state constitution." However, the passing of the frontier and concomitant changes in Tennessee's economic, social and political affiliations necessitated the 1834 and 1870 Constitutions. The 1870 Constitution became the oldest unamended constitution of any sovereign state in the world and Limited Constitutional Conventions have been authorized in order to modify the Constitution by the Conventions of 1953, 1959, 1965, 1971 and 1977. Indexed recordings for the Conventions of 1959, 1965, 1971 and 1977 are on file in the Archives.

These original records deserve attention as a reflection of the mandate providing constitutional change for future conventions. Temporary records generated are maintained until replaced by the next convention. The 1965 rough journals are now being utilized for this purpose. Other uses include academic and genealogical research. Biographical data submitted by the 1953 Convention delegates are available in the delegates own handwriting.

The records have been arranged and described in order to facilitate the location of specific items. Conventions have been designated as the series titles beginning with the earliest records available and continuing through 1977. Specific types of records generated comprise the designation of the subseries level. An index to correspondence and major subjects has been compiled to assist the researcher in locating information on topics addressed by the various constitutional conventions.

The Conventions of 1834 and 1870 produced Constitutions, but the later Conventions addressed limited topics and these are listed in order to guide researchers in locating information on particular aspects of constitutional reform.

Limited Constitutional Convention of 1953:

a) Article XI, Section 3, relative to amendments and conventions; b) Article II, Section 23, relative to Legislative compensation; c) Article III, Section 4, relative to Governor's term of office; d) Article III, Section 18, relative to Governor's veto power; e) Article IV, Section 1, right to suffrage; f) Article XI, Section 9, local options for home rule, uniform city charters and approval of metropolitan consolidation.

Limited Constitutional Convention of 1959:

a) to fix term of office of Sheriff for period of four years; b) to fix term of office of Trustee for period of four years; c) to permit all persons of the age of eighteen years and older the right to vote.
